This 1960 French farce, adapted for Broadway in 1965 and revived to much greater acclaim in 2008, features a self-styled Parisian lothario, Bernard, who has three fiancées. Yes, three. One Italian, one German and one American – each a beautiful airline hostess with frequent “layovers” in Paris. Bernard manages to keep “one up, one down, and one pending” until unexpected schedule changes bring all three women to his apartment at the same time. Throw in a sublimely unhelpful French maid and Bernard’s nervous old school buddy, Robert, and you have yourself a good old-fashioned door-slammer – “propelled by the same gusty spirit,” wrote the New York Times of the Broadway revival, “that animated commedia dell’arte and the silent films of Keaton, Chaplin and Lloyd.”
