Matthew Gibbon, liberal lion and university president, may have finally gone too far in his battle against the politically conservative Dean of the law school - his son-in-law and former protégé, Vincent. He has vandalized his office and records. Caught between them, Matthew's daughter desperately tries to protect her father and negotiate a solution with a Board of Regents and faculty up in arms because of his actions. As the play progresses, the differences between the two men become as apparent as America before 9/11 and after. This family drama explores change and the abuse of power within a tight circle of people who despite loving each other are rocked by the convictions of their hearts.
