It is 1885, a time of wonder and scientific advancements. Edison is bringing the electric light to households and in the home and operating theater of Dr. Givings, his invention, an electric vibrator, is bringing relief from the symptoms of hysteria in both his female and some male patients. While he is a little cool and aloof, the scientist loves his young wife Catherine, who is now recovering from the birth of their first child and the disappointment of needing a wet nurse to supplement her own abilities to feed her. Catherine is fascinated by the therapies in the next room and her curiosity and longing lead to discoveries that change and electrify their lives forever. Because of its mature content, this play is not suitable for children under the age of 16.
